.... Team Head, Louise

A few years later I was in Watford hospital again. The expression on the faces of one or two doctors convinced me they thought I would die. I then had a heavy workload, phoning all the people who needed to know, including Forrest Bishop on the west coast. The rules said you could only phone during certain (UK) hours. I had to break the rules by phoning the US west coast during daylight there. So I used my mobile under the bedclothes.

They put me in a private room as a trouble maker. So I pinned this notice to the wall in there. Later I was moved to Queens Square to have brain surgery. Ivor Catt 29.7.2023
